My New World

(Blog 0024 AndrewHadden.org. Posted: 2026/11/20.)

God told me to write this new blog by giving me the title, but no hint of what he meant, for a good while. Then he finally said, "Politics." That too left me puzzled and uncertain as to what he wanted me to say. Eventually, I got to thinking of saying things about my situation and using it to prepare many other ministers to follow the call of God into government. Then God indicated I was getting closer to what he had in mind. Finally, after an hour or more, I heard God say, "Why don't you start?"

When God called me, I knew I did not fit any mold of ministry of which I knew. I grew up with a father in ministry, and his father before him, but I did not really want to be called. I'd seen the cost, and experienced it. When God did call me, I had already earned a degree with a very broad background – a degree in management, with minors in math and physical science, and had started an MBA program but had to drop out due to serious illness, that almost killed me. But I obeyed God and went back to the Bible college I had grown up around, with my father in teaching and administration. If I learned anything from my father, it was obedience to God no matter the cost. And he paid great cost, especially in his early years of ministry, and serving as an acting chaplain on a U.S. Navy ship in World War Two, in serious battles that cost lives all around him, and serious persecution.

I would eventually learn that many of the ministers in the denomination I grew up in were "bivocational." That meant that they pastored small churches that could not provide enough to raise a family, unless they also held one or more jobs besides pastoring. They could even have two careers at once. In the times in my childhood and youth, when my father pastored, he was bivocational. At the Bible college, we barely managed to get by on just his salary, so my mother took a job in the college library, when her children were old enough. My point is that ministry can be mixed with other jobs and careers, outside times religious services normally occur. And people in small towns and small churches are used to ministers being real ministers, and successfully tending their "flock," doing their ministry, even though having other careers. Evangelists and other special speakers often have to have secular jobs when they are starting out, until they build up, and maintain, enough scheduled speaking arrangements. My father did that too, when he was an evangelist.

Mixing ministry and a secular job or career is not unusual, though normally done out of necessity. The Apostle Paul found it necessary to work in his second career, as a tentmaker, to support his ministry too, so don't tell me this is not "biblical." But what if that second occupation is not a job, or career, but a second calling? What if God says that second calling is just as important as the first one? What if God says that second calling is more important than our first calling, to the Church? Please let me explain. Hear me out. But I find myself in that position right now – and many more will, across America, soon.

God got me to finally recognize my second calling by telling me that if I did not serve in that second calling, the nation would fall, and my family would be refugees. But I don't bear that responsibility alone. Ministers, across America, and the world, are receiving that same calling now. Our nation, and many others, are on the verge of falling to the Antichrist. And I can name him, because God named him. He is subverting nations from within, all over, with bribery and election fraud. "Dark money" is pouring into elections all over, to buy people and policies, that make subverting nations from within much easier. The people they bribe and support become traitors of the worse kind. They want to rule us in totalitarian governments they control for their own benefit and their own perverted desires. They want what our government won't give them – our wives, daughters, and children. Socialism creates totalitarian governments. Islam creates totalitarian governments. God says these and communist governments and those in secret Satanism and the Illuminati, and other secret occult groups, are aligned together, and are preparing to annihilate Christians, the world over, because our voting bloc, and morality, block their evil desires. So God says they want to use the power of government to imprison and annihilate us.

But God is about to use his power to annihilate them – in defense of his people. But somebody, a lot of somebodies, will need to stand up and take over the reigns of government when he does – and that is about to happen. It will be the fulfillment of the parable of the tares, false wheat, and Christ's explanation of it, in Matthew chapter 13. See my AndrewHadden.org Blog 0018, "Explaining to Everyone What is Happening and Coming," for my explanation of how that will happen. And see Blog 0018 on AndrewHadden.com, for my explanation of the great evil these people are doing in secret, especially to our children, that justifies this great judgment, and defends God's good heart in it. My wife, Amber, and I are eyewitnesses, God's eyewitnesses, to that great evil. If you have a heart, you will weep over the evil done to her. Be thankful God did not call you to this, but somebody had to do it, and God told me it was to "save the nation," when he first sent me to share it. We are the tip of the iceberg, the tiny part that shows above the surface. Millions will die across the world in this judgment, and that is an understatement.

As I wrote this blog, and talked of bivocational ministers, of which there are many, God seemed to help me see that I had been bivocational too – but it was done differently that most. I had to alternate between ministry and my other career, not weekly, but over spans of years. I had to alternate full-time preparation for the two careers, and alternate experience in ministry, or work that was foundational for that other career, secular pursuits that prepared me for that other career. Eventually, for more than 12 years, I was combining ministry with work that also prepared me for government leadership. I did ministry that let me preach, and write, with a ministry purpose, as well as serve in administrative and technical leadership at my denominational headquarters. It also increased my understanding of politics – because denominational executives are elected, and serve their constituencies. Don't kid yourself, the Church has politics, and, if you can survive there, God has given you the skills to survive and thrive in politics as well. And politics will get "nicer" with the secretly evil people having been judged and removed by God. So, swallow hard, and obey God to lead in government as well as your church, or alternating with your ministry. Save the nation, for your children and your grandchildren – and everybody else's.

This morning, I listened to one my favorite pastors preaching with intensity and honesty. My wife had him on, and God had me listen. I then talked, thinking of how I have experience speaking in the Church, but I deliver my sermons without great oratory, just simply, but God anoints it so it brings results. I was then thinking that I don't know how to speak into politics. Then God said, "Speak just like that" – as I have in the Church. I do speak intensely in the Church.

I spoke of how I had spent decades praying for revival, and now I don't get to see it because God says preserving the nation is more important, because if freedom falls in America, it falls across the world. I said it weeping. Then my wife reminded me we get to see it, speaking on Sundays. I said I really want to say it to that pastor, to let him know of the pain in my heart, but we realized God is asking the same sacrifice of him.
